The Rev. Dr. Jonathan Davis serves as coach to non-profit and business leaders in North America. He is the co-director of the Healthy Churches Institute in Georgetown, Texas, and the founder of the Small-Town Churches Network (www.smalltownchurches.org), which is dedicated to sharing research, ideas and tools to help small-town churches. He holds a Doctor of Ministry degree from Logdson Seminary, where his research focused on equipping small-town churches for 21st century ministry. In 2019 Jonathan received the Bratton Family Ministry Award for Excellence in Academic Performance and Pastoral Ministry.

From 2018-2020, Jonathan co-chaired the Middle Peninsula Opioid and Heroin Task Force in Virginia's 98th Legislative District, and helped lead a statewide effort to raise awareness and engagement regarding addiction and recovery among houses of worship across the Commonwealth. In partnering with Virginia's State Legislature, Jonathan launched a statewide initiative called Recovery Sunday, encouraging and equipping every church in the state to have a recovery focus Sunday once a year. In this capacity, Jonathan has provided testimony before Virginia House and Senate Committees, and written policy briefs for diverse stakeholders from across the state.

Jonathan is passionate to help churches and non-profits across North America navigate the unprecedented changes brought on by postmodernity, and to train and equip faith leaders to find not only opportunity but Divine blessing in the midst of cultural and professional upheaval.
